Global meat-eating is on the rise

- [1] When Zhou Xueyu and her husband moved from Shandong to Beijing 28 years ago, they began selling fresh pork. On a very busy day, they might sell about 100kg of meat: pork was still a luxury for the majority of the population.
- [2] Now, they sell two tonnes (2000kg) of meat a day. They are keeping up with the growing obsession with meat in China – where people have a particular penchant for pork. In 1961, the average Chinese person ate 4kg of meat a year. And today? That's up to 62kg. In fact, half of the world's pork is eaten in China.
